NOTICE.

November 6th, 1918

You are undoubtedly aware that as an original subscriber to bonds of the Fourth Liberty Loan you are for the period of the War and for two years thereafter accorded an exemption from surtaxes, excess profits and War profits taxes on the interest received after January 1, 1918 on an amount of 4 and 4-1/4 per cent bonds of the Liberty Loans previously issued equal to one and one-half times the amount of your original subscription to the Fourth Loan, but not exceeding a total of $45,000 of principal of such previous issues provided you still held a proportionate amount of Fourth Liberty Loan Bonds (originally subscribed for) at the date of your tax return. In other words; such amount of bonds of the Fourth Loan must be retained in order to carry the exemption as to income from previous issues.

This fact is of great importance to tax payers and should not be overlooked.

USE OF LARGER IMPLEMENTS AND MORE HORSES HELP TO SOLVE LABOR PROBLEM

Examples of Methods Which Save Man Power—One Man Operating Tractor Drawing Three Plows and Another With a Four-Mule Team Operating Large Harrow.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If two men, driving one horse each, can combine the two horses into one team which one man can drive, and this team can do as much or more work than two did singly, isn't it wise to combine them and save our man's time?

And if the farm is large and conditions warrant, isn't it wise to combine two of these two-horse teams into one, and save another man's time?

Work which is generally done in some parts of the country with the aid of machines that greatly increase the efficiency of the men employed is still largely done by hand in other parts. Machinery for most of the work in connection with preparing and filling the soil is available in many sizes, and frequently two or more outfits, each requiring the time of one man, are seen working in the same field on operations for which implements of two or three times the size of those used could be employed with just as satisfactory results. There are few farm horses which a driver of ordinary intelligence cannot train to work in large teams in a few days' time, and most of the larger implements are little if any more complicated or difficult to handle than the small ones for the same work.

Installation of Machinery.

Where the farm is large, and it is not possible to procure sufficient labor, it will certainly be more profitable, as well as patriotic, to install machinery which will enable the operator to plant, cultivate and harvest a full acreage of the crops best suited to his land and the needs of the country, than to let some of the land lie idle or, at best, have it prepared and worked poorly, and the crops out of season.

In many cases, a worker can double the work done by the use of a larger implement and a correspondingly greater amount of motive power, and sometimes the gain is considerably more than this. If the nature of the work and the machinery for doing it are such that the best implements will increase the efficiency of the worker by only 50 or even 25 per cent, their use may make possible an increase in acreage by just that amount, and at least will enable the farmer to do his work in less time and allow him to take advantage of good weather if the season is unfavorable.

Buy Larger Machinery.

Can all farmers afford to buy extra horses and larger implements to save man labor? Of course, those whose farms require but one or two horses to do the ordinary work can seldom afford to do so. But such can secure this additional help by combining to purchase larger machinery, and doubling up their teams to operate it; or one, usually more skilled in operating machinery, or better able to purchase it, may own the larger implements, and do the work for several neighbor farmers, besides his own, to the advantage of all concerned. Both these methods have been tried out in many localities with mowers, harvesters, tractors, threshing machines and other farm machinery.

KEEP SHEEP FLOCK TO CONTROL WEEDS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the best and cheapest ways to control weeds on farms is to keep a flock of sheep. In addition to controlling weeds without cost, sheep will render a profit by producing nutritious food and wool, and will assist materially in meeting demands on the nation for meat and wool production. If weeds are not permitted to grow and develop leaves they will die, but it would require a great amount of hard labor to keep most weeds under control by this method. Sheep will keep the weeds down and the more weeds they eat the less will be their cost of upkeep, and the greater will be the supply of food released for other stock. Many rough or permanent grass pastures that require mowing can be kept clean by the use of sheep, while at the same time the cattle-carrying capacity of the pasture is increased.

HOW TO SHIP NEW POTATOES

Prevent Losses by Loading Them Carefully into Cars—Double-Headed Barrel is Good.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Shifting of the loads in transit, weak and partly filled packages, and lack of ventilation are responsible for losses in many cars of new potatoes which are arriving at markets. The loading of diseased potatoes is also responsible for considerable loss. In some cases shipments that show scab wilt or late blight are practically worthless when they reach the market.

The double-headed barrel appears to be the best package for new potatoes that is now in general use. If properly made it protects the potatoes as well as holds them in place. Much less breakage has been found in cars where the barrels are loaded on end than when loaded on their bligs. Strips should be placed on top of the lower layers of barrels for the upper layers to rest upon.

Loading barrels on their bligs is not a safe practice unless headliners (strips to prevent heads bulging) are used. It is said that the use of headliners would prevent nine-tenths of the breakage in all types of loads with barrels. Extra bracing is needed when barrels are loaded on their bligs.

The sack is not a suitable container for tender new potatoes; it offers no protection from bruising, and when loaded is hard to ventilate. If sacks are to be used they should be of no greater capacity than 100 pounds. The smaller sack could be handled with much greater care and would lend itself to ventilation better.

Hampers are not suitable packages for potatoes. They do not have the necessary strength for the weight of their contents and offer little protection. As long as hampers are used for potatoes and other heavy produce there will be severe loss from breakage. If used they should be loaded on end and alternate baskets inverted. Great care should be taken to make the load tight, and no slack space should be allowed in the car. This will lessen the chance of shifting.

Crates of various sorts are being used, and appear satisfactory where the strength of the crate is sufficient for the weight of its contents. Weak crates should not be used under any circumstances, and crates with wide openings tend to wilt the potatoes while in transit. Crates must be loaded tight and firm, and no slack space left under any circumstances without suitable bracing, while strapping is recommended.

NEED OF ANCIENT PRACTICE

History Tells Us That Roman Farmers Stored Various Succulent Feeds for Live Stock.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

History tells of Roman farmers who carefully chopped fine various green, succulent feeds and packed them in pits for use during the winter season. The practice seems to have been common and the feed kept well. From these early times it has been good practice to store various green crops in pits or airtight containers for feeding to stock. The silo is the present-day result, and a farmer who raises live stock cannot afford to be without one. The advantages of the silo are numerous, but some of the more important are:

1. Green, succulent feed is available throughout the year.
2. A silo stores more feed for less cost than any other farm building.
3. The feed is handy for use.
